Multitude Acclaims the Senator at Music Hall.

Strong Denunciations of Republican Policy Arouse the Great Audience to Excite-

(Baltimore Sun, Oct. 19.)

When George L. Wellington, senior Republican United States Senator from at Music Hall he probably faced an audience greater than any which has ever addressed. He a Republisands of his fellow-citizens and denounced his party, repudiated its nominces, scoffed at its doctrines, riddled with the most withering sarcasm and invective its pretentions and its falseness, while the mass of humanity before him went wild with enthusiasm. The people cheered and cheered and cheered again the courage and the patriotism of the man who spoke to them. They shouted aloud in a great chorus that they knew he was speaking the truth, and when he would have stopped begged him to "Go on!" Go on!" They tossed their hats in the air and allowed the uncontrollable enthuslasm with which the spea er inscired them to sweep them clear out of their seats than at times the crowd as a whole, men and women, was upon its feet swaying toward the platform, yelling at the top of their lungs, stretching out their hands to this man who told them he was willing to clasp hands with any shade of political death, but would not how the knee nor surrender the last vestige of his manhood to a party which called upon him to follow where his convictions and his conscience told him he should not go.

THE OCCASION AND THE MAN.

THE OCCASION AND THE MAN. THE OCCASION AND THE MAN.
Few men in this State have been given the welcome that was accorded Senator Wellington last night by his audlence. It was a great moment in his life—that when he faced the crowd—and it could not have helped being a proud one. There were many Republicans on the stage as well as on the floor, but not one single word of reproach, nor a breath of resentment, emanated from them. On the contrary, ever, where in the crowd—on the stage, too—kepublicans, and known as such, could be seen cheering and applauding with the most enthusiastic Democrats in the hall. The first utterance of the with the most enthusiastic Democratis in the hall. The first utterance of the Senator—"I believe in the Declaration of Independence"— gave the crowd its cue. The words had hardly left his lips before the storm burst, and for minutes—not seconds—the urrear was terrific. As he progressed Senator Wellington rew stronger and his grip on the feel-as he progressed senator wellington grew stronger and his grip on the feelings of the crowd tightened, until he swayed them at will. His every sentence was pregnant and full of meaning, delivered in a voice and with an earnestness that left no doubt of the intensity with which he believed the things he said.

"DERVISH-LIKE ROOSEVELT." "DERVISH-LIKE ROOSEVELT."

At one time in his speech he paused and, throwing wide his arms, said: "My countrymen, I am a Republican, not a McKinleyite, a follower of Lincoln, not a servant of Hanna. Having faith in the high ideals of the patriots of the Revolution, I cannot now bow in submission or join in the mad rantings or dervish-like howlings for war of Theodore Roosevelt"

This came early in his address and before he had gotten well into the heart of his subject. It sufficed to show the crowd that Mr. Wellington was not afraid to say what he thought—and from that moment they were his.

his.

"The supreme—the paramount—issue of this campaign," he said, "is Imeprialism. You cannot by ribaid Jokes laugh it away." This statement was the key to practically his whole speech, and he plunged into the heart of the matter with arguments and facts. He reminded the people of his opposition to the Spanish war long before it began, and traced the various unconstitutional steps taken by the Administration from the close of the war until the present time.

DANGER IN MUSINIEWS

DANGER IN M'KINLEY'S POLICY.

"Sirs," said he, "there is danger lurking everywhere, but greatest of all the links in the infamous chain of Imperialism to be forged about the American people is the foreign policy of the present Administration." He boldly charged that there was and is a secret understanding between McKinley and Great Eritain. He reiterated the now famous conversation on the question of the Paris treaty which he had with the President, and again charged the President with having broken faith with him, failure to keep his solemn pledge and trickery in getting him to vote for that treaty.

Senator Weilington said that he knew he was being called a "rebel" and a "traitor," but in stentorian tones declared that "It is a good thing for human liberty that there is a rebel now and then." He believed, he said, that he was just a little too big to draw personalities into national politics in spite of the charge made. The President was credited by him with having "good Intentions," but as surrounded by evil and malevolent influences which he was too weak to resist.

REFERENCE TO CLEVELAND.

A reference to Grover Cleveland's buildog tenacity and the statement that a tyrant was better for the Republic than a weak man elicited a great shout of applause, which was followed by a still greater outburst when he asked what would have become of the Republican Vice Presidential candidate if there had been no war aith Spain. "He will come to-morrow," said Senator Wellington, "and tell you again about himself at San Juan Hill, but he will forget to tell you that had it not been for the colored troops, who saved him, he would not be here to tell you how he shot a Spanlard in the back."

At this the audience burst into a tumult of applause. Every man in the crowd seemed to be on his feet, thousands of arms were waved and a roar of cheers rent the air.

The cheering lasted until Senator Wellington left the stage. As he was leaving the hall by the Maryland avenue entrance a crowd of about 500 was massed around his carriage and the Senator drove away amid more cheers.

It is, in brief, a humorous and ludicrous* expose of certain characteristic French follies and foibles of married life. It has been called in New York a companion piece of "The Gay Parisians," because its complications, like those of the latter play, revolve around a restaurant incident, and because it is full of the rush and go and lively fun of the other play.

This is the tenth season of Charles Frohman's comedians, but it is their first appearance here. The organization is composed of such clever players as E. M. MOTHER'S SONGS

By JAMES M. HARRISON.

Tatk about your high-toned singers.
Over whom the people rave,
The sweetest one I ever knew
Lies sleeping in her grave.
Tho' dead, she's not to gotten.
And my mind will ever bring
Back the songs of dear old mother,
O! the songs she used to sing!

Yes, 1 still can hear the sweetness, Just a-ringing in my ears. And when I think of her still voice Come stient failing tears. Twas the sweetest kind of music For the peasant and the king. The sones of dear old mother, O! the songs she used to sing!

Years have fled now since she left us. Years have fled now since she left us.
Rut it seems like yesterday.
When all life's clouds were brightened
With her simple, honest lay.
You can worship prima domas.
But forever let me cling
To the songs of dear old mother,
O! the songs she used to sing!

How pleasant are the mem'ries
Of that heaven-horrowed voice:
How my youthful cares would vanish;
How my young heart would rejoice.
I know the heavenly choir has
A sweet and better ring.
For she's adding all the sweetness
With the songs she used to sing!
